

ABSTRACT

The invention relates to a method for desensitizing a crystal exhibiting non-linear optical properties, in particular a lithium niobate or lithium tantalate crystal against damage of exposure to light action (optical damages). The similar type damages are caused by refraction index modifications induced by light. The dark conductivity of the crystal is increased by doping with extrinsic ions.